you have it right as a single question we would write do you know who he is not do you know who is he however the way you have punctuated these six words makes the wording acceptable in jan 13 2015 i don t know who this is i don t know who is this though i know the first one is more acceptable especially grammatically eventually i want to raise the following question we could use a if the pronoun is the subject of a sentence use he if the pronoun is the object of a sentence use him your example should be who is he an example where you would use both i ve seen him jun 16 2022 i think this answer is misleading the only reason who is you in this context is a valid utterance is because it s a mention as opposed to use of the token you which you ve quite jan 12 2021 i was doing an english exercise and i read the following sentence ask walter he knows who s who here what is the meaning of who s who i don t think you ve clearly identified that your first example sentence are you a person who s a long time here is incorrect i don t want to change your answer in a way you wouldn t want so would jan 13 2017 who is they i assume that as mari loua said that they would be italicized or enclosed in air quotes so considering this the question is grammatically correct this means that i know we generally use the singular verb in this structure even if the answer is plural in ame i think as in who is talking jack is talking who is talking joey and sam are talking i would like to know why who is there is correct and why we can t use who are there even if we know there is more than one person oct 27 2019 in english you can be plural when a addressing a group of people one may refer to that group as you the word you can also be singular used to address a single person your sentence is
