the maastricht inflation criterion designed in the early 1990s to bring high inflation eu countries in line with low inflation countries prior to the introduction of the euro poses challenges for both new eu member countries and the european central bank while the criterion has positively influenced the public stance toward low inflation it has biased the choice of the disinflation strategy toward short run fiat measures rather than adopting structural reforms with longer term benefits with unpleasant consequences for the efficiency of the eurozone transmission mechanism the criterion is also unnecessarily tight for new member countries as it mainly reflects cyclical developments this paper examines the role of changing factor endowments in the growth and decline of industries and regions the implications of an endowment based heckscher ohlin trade model for plant entry and exit are tested on 20 years of data for the entire us manufacturing sector the trade model provides predictions for which industries will see growth through the positive net entry of plants a multi region version of the same model has predictions for which regions will see high turnover and net entry of plants in a country such as the u s that is augmenting both its physical and human capital the least capital intensive least skill intensive industries are correctly predicted to have the lowest rate of net entry in addition increases in regional capital and skill intensity are associated with higher probabilities of shutdown especially for plants in industries with low initial capital and skill intensities this paper outlines what inflation targeting involves for emerging market transition countries and discusses the advantages and disadvantages of this monetary policy strategy the discussion suggests that although inflation targeting is not a panacea and may not be appropriate for many emerging market countries it can be a highly useful monetary policy strategy in a number of them the paper examines possible monetary policy strategies for latin america that may help lock in the gains in the fight against inflation attained by the region during the 1990s we start by calling for a refocus of the debate about the conduct of monetary policy away from thinking that it is about whether the nominal exchange rate should be fixed or flexible instead we argue that the focus should be on whether the monetary policy regime appropriately constrains discretion in monetary policymaking this focus suggest that there are three basic frameworks that deserve serious discussion as possible long run strategies for monetary policy in latin america a hard exchange rate peg monetary targeting and inflation targeting we look at the advantages and disadvantages of each of these strategies and then examine the recent track record of monetary policy in some latin american countries for clues as to which of the three strategies might be best suited to economies in the region in the aftermath of emerging market crises from russia to asia and latin america there is a quest for better monetary arrangements that are more crisis proof fixed rates are out flexible rates are in with a policy focus on inflation targeting but there is of course the alternative of abolishing exchange rates all together this paper revisits the issue of dollarization or currency boards to review what arguments in the debate stand up the case for flexible exchange rates emphasizes the need for a tool to accomplish relative price adjustment this paper argues that in an intertemporal perspective most shocks require financing in the capital market rather than adjustment moreover countries frequently do not use their flexible rate to play a cyclical role and as a result only a pay a premium for the option to depreciate but do not take advantage of the flexibility on the contrary they engineer systematic overvaluation in the context of inflation targeting over the past 20 years there has been a proliferation of emerging market crises and a vast accumulation of commentary descriptive theoretical and applied highlighting the origins and mechanics of each crisis and of crises in general and there is plenty of analysis on how to deal with crises both in terms of prevention and of cures is it possible now to distill from all this a simple set of propositions that summarize the experience and capture the chief lessons this paper sets out a few propositions that summarize what is known and accepted the interest in doing so is to promote a set of presumptions about what is unsound practice with a presumption that it cannot fail to engender in time a crisis at the center of that discussion is the role of balance sheets moreover crises are not just financial experiences but rather involve large and lasting social costs and important redistribution of income and wealth that makes it especially important to secure agreement on what constitutes bad practice and identify areas of continuing controversy
